Do you ever feel like you're not accomplishing anything in life? Sometimes the feeling of being a failure is enough to drag us down and keep us from doing our best work. We feel like nothing we do is really good enough. Nothing has ever lived up to our expectations or goals. We let it get the best of us... This week, I came across an entrepreneur who described his feelings of self-doubt in a blog post that went viral. It's called, "everything you've ever achieved in your life is luck". When he wrote this, he was feeling like a complete failure because his business wasn't doing well and he was sick of having "failed again". I wish I could say this blog post was written by me, but it wasn't. It was written by an entrepreneur named Tom Kuegler who runs a digital agency called DistilledU. He wrote this post after having his second business fail, but DistilledU has gone on to become wildly successful. Here's the crux of his argument:

I think that lots of people feel like failures sometimes because they compare themselves to what they really want to achieve or because they compare other people's successes to their own failures. As I've mentioned before, the only reason you should care about someone else's success is if you can learn something from it... Don't let others' accomplishments make you feel like a failure. If you're not succeeding, it's your own fault if you've chosen the wrong path.

In fact, the rise of social media as a major marketing tool is one of the most talked about topics in marketing today. <http://www.thostingblog.com/?p=6097>, xforce keygen autocad 2010 download - As a Marketing Director for a leading brand, I can tell you that we succeeded and failed with Facebook and other social media tools and realized quickly that there is no magic bullet. It has to be planned and implemented correctly or can actually do more harm than good to your brand if done incorrectly. I also know that there is no reason why small business should not be considering using this powerful tool as part of their marketing strategy as well. <http://www.thostingblog>.
